

EAST ASIAN STUDIES AT LIBERAL ARTS COLLEGES: TEACHING, RESEARCH, AND THE ACADEMIC JOB MARKET

Japan Foundation Visiting Lecture

Are you interested in learning more about a career in East Asian Studies at a liberal arts college? Nearly one-fourth of all Asian Studies programs in the US are housed in liberal arts colleges, making them an essential sector of the academic job market, and even colleges without formal programs regularly employ EAS faculty, including language instructors. Join this informal discussion to learn about how teaching, research, service, and community expectations can differ from large research universities. In addition to covering the benefits and challenges of working at liberal arts colleges, we will also discuss what smaller institutions are looking for in academic job search candidates and how you can tailor your job applications to particular colleges.

W. Evan Young is an assistant professor specializing in the history of East Asia, the history of medicine, and the history of gender and sexuality at Dickinson College in Carlisle, Pennsylvania.

Date: Friday, February 3rd, 2023

Time: 1:00 - 3:00 PM

Location: Learning Service Building Room 107

INFO: eas.arizona.edu

Lunch will be provided and all EAS graduate students are invited to attend.

This lecture is made possible by the support of the Japan Foundation

